Officers Cold and Wet Suffer on Riding Test

Thirty-two Serving in Department Offices Travel Over Muddy Gettysburg Pike, Drenched to Skin—Older Men Cramped and Tired at Finish.

ROCKVILLE, Oct. 3.—Suffering with the cold and drenched to the skin after their ride of thirty miles up and down the muddy Gettysburg pike, thirty-two army officers who are undergoing a three days' test ride, prescribed by Roosevelt as a method of determining their fitness for field service, dismounted shortly after 1 o'clock today at their camp in the fair grounds.

Many of the older riders were cramped and could hardly stand as their feet touched the ground. They had been in the saddle since 7 o'clock this morning under the most adverse circumstances under which any test ride has taken place.

Most of the men were what are known as desk men on duty in the War Department, and many are perilously near the age of retirement.

Although the riding has been especially hard there is not a single officer, however fatigued he may be, who will drop out, for if they are not able to stand the racket of the thirty-mile roundabout route and wind up at Port Meyer.

The tents of the officers and of their

PRISON DELEGATES PLAYED THE MAID LEAVE FOR HOME IN REAL TEA SHOP

With President Charles R. Henderson, "the philosopher of Illinois," in the chair, and amid scenes of united enthusiasm, the International Prison Congress adjourned this morning at the International Bureau of American Republics, to begin its second great march around the world in 1915, in London, where the next assembly of the congress will be held. In that city the international body first convened in 1872, and since that time has circled the globe with its great assemblies.

The nomination, made yesterday by the International Prison Commission, of Sir Evelyn Ruggles-Brise, of England, for president of the congress was this morning ratified unanimously, and amid much enthusiasm by all the delegates who attended the closing session. In his speech of acceptance, Sir Ruggles-Brise declared that while the delegates to the congress would find a warm welcome awaiting them in London in 1915, he anticipated their coming with some diffidence, because "England is old; its laws are old; our prison buildings are old."

He explained the mission of the prison congress as one limiting, by preventive measures, the field of operation of criminal law, and of adjusting punishment to the individual case.

Dr. Henderson, in his farewell speech to the delegates, announced that the prison commission of the organization now consists of representatives of twenty-two governments, Egypt, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan, and the United States, and that the delegates to the congress were represented at the congress by one of historic and international fame, and by one of the most prominent of the present generation.

ROOSEVELT SWINGS BELLAGUAGES IN LINE

Colonel's Visit Raises Important Question on Nomination for 1912.

By JOHN SNURE.

ROME, Ga., Oct. 3.—The chief questions raised in connection with Theodore Roosevelt's Southern trip are these:

How solid will the Southern delegations stand for the renomination of President Taft in 1912; and if Mr. Roosevelt's friends seek to renominate him, will it be possible for him to break into the Southern delegations?

Postmaster General Hitchcock is now generally supposed to have these questions corralled, ready to turn over for the renomination of his chief, the President, when the next national Republican convention is held.

Since the Roosevelt trip to the South and Southwest was planned, far-seeing politicians have been asking themselves if this was a foray into a region where Taft forces calculate they have possession and will keep possession.

Already the questions referred to are being answered. Signs are already numerous that Roosevelt can reach out, if he chooses, and capture a part of the Southern delegations. Those who believe that they can be delivered to Mr. Taft have evidently been miscalculating.

Late last night before he left Knoxville for this place, Colonel Roosevelt had an important conference with former Representative Hale, of Tennessee, now member of the national committee from that State. In this conference, there is reason to believe, the state of the feeling of the South toward Roosevelt with respect to 1912, was discussed.

Delegations for Roosevelt.

What this feeling is may be judged in part by the enthusiastic crowds that are turning out to greet the former President. At Bristol, Va., and Knoxville, yesterday, and at Dalton, and Rome, Ga., today, moreover, it is stated by politicians of prominence that neither Mr. Hitchcock nor anyone else can keep a large share of the Southern delegations from Roosevelt, if he will consent to take a renomination.

National Committeeman Hale is a staunch Republican, and a friend of President Taft, and of Postmaster General Hitchcock. He was asked by a newspaper man the direct question:

"Will the Southern delegations support Mr. Taft at the next national convention?"

Mr. Hale replied: "Neither Mr. Hitchcock, nor anyone else, can keep a large share of the Southern delegations from going to Roosevelt, if he lets it be known he will accept renomination. The Roosevelt sentiment in my own State is great. The people are for him and Taft. They want him for President again."

Mr. Hale asserted his firm belief that the situation would be found the same in a number of other Southern States. While it is not disclosed what conversation passed between the former President and Mr. Hale, it is not without interest that the Tennessee national committeeman talked with the colonel in this frame of mind. Politicians will not be slow to take conclusions from it.

Colonel Roosevelt captured Georgia again today. Something of the feeling toward him was found by the gathering about the station at Dalton, about 7 o'clock this morning, of a crowd of about 1,500 people clamoring to see him. He was not yet up and did not present himself, and they disappointedly stood around watching his car expectantly.

Visits Industrial School.

At 7:30 o'clock this morning the Roosevelt special arrived at Rome. It stopped a short distance from the city, at a crossing, and there the colonel and party took vehicles for Miss Martha Berry's industrial school, not far from the city.

The school is an industrial one where the poor boys of the South can learn trades and the girls can learn domestic science, talked with many of them, and asked whole volleys of questions, and finally, at 11:15 spoke to the students.

Among the girls, the colonel was shown the famous mule team of the school, Nip and Tuck, and drove them.

He was welcomed by the students at the assembly hall, where he sang several original songs, and several of them delivered short speeches of welcome.

After the speech he took luncheon at the school, and about 12:30 was taken to Rome. Here, before an audience of thousands from north Georgia and Alabama, the colonel presented the keys of the city in the form of a big stick by J. N. King, president of the Manufacturers and Merchants' Association.

He spoke from the most expensive speaker's platform ever erected in the South. It was supported by four steel poles of Floyd county cotton, worth at least $4,000.

At 1:30 o'clock Colonel Roosevelt left Rome for Atlanta, where he speaks tonight in behalf of the movement for a memorial to Uncle Remus, Joel Chandler Harris, of whom Roosevelt was a warm admirer. Five years ago, when in Atlanta, Mr. Roosevelt said: "President may come and Presidents may go, but Uncle Remus stays put."

In going to Miss Berry's school today, Colonel Roosevelt and party rode over the Summerville road, where General Sherman, in 1864, marched with 50,000 men. This was after the capture of Atlanta, with Sherman chasing Hood, went back to Rome, and in the Bill Arp cottage he planned the march to the sea. Hood had passed over the same road with his army not long before.
